The cat is still staring at my laptop in mingled fascination and terror.

It's the camera angle that totally makes it for me.

That was a beautiful thing.

For certain values of beautiful.

"Classical music elevates our thoughts and raises our aspirations above the mundanities of life," T. says, with a perfectly straight face.

Oh, now she's meeping away in falsetto in the kitchen. I think it's the Toreador song. But with T., it can be hard to tell. g

...were you two not so adorably welded as one at the hip, I'd so steal her away to my Not So Evil Lair.
Srsly. sighs in Dire Attraction

...I'd do it anyway, but I need my credit to get the Wonderflonium on the black market, and Wabbit'd have it axed before the white panel van hit the state line. The perils of associating with The Man, I suppose.

She has many fine qualities, including awesome taste in women. Perfect pitch is not one of them.

I am entirely too sober for this sort of thing.

Though not too sober to think that the cameraman must have been a little nervous with Animal behind him like that, I must admit.

Note to self - make Himself watch it when he gets home from work.

Well I don't know about Friday nights (as last night I went to bed early and slept well) but that makes for a slightly odd Saturday morning.

Thanks. I liked that.

I watched it about sixteen times. Giggling like a fool.

That was fantabulous! Did you watch any of the associated videos? Beaker's version of "Ode To Joy" was hysterical.

Glorious. And based on your evidence, it seems that single people and married people do the same things on Friday night. grin

I have seen the Danny Boy (oh Boy oh Boy oh Boy) but never Ode to Joy.

I'll go look now.
